

Chemicals Safety, Regulations and Environment Consultant

ICOMIA is an international non-profit membership organisation serving the recreational boating industry. Our members are national recreational marine industry associations as well as businesses that support the industry. We are the voice of the recreational marine industry worldwide.

We are looking for an environmental consultant to support our members by giving them the very latest information and advice about the rapidly changing marine chemicals environment. To focus on regulations, directives, emerging research and new technologies concerning the chemicals environment, with particular attention to regulations in the EU, the UK and emerging markets worldwide.

We are looking for someone who can provide our members with:

- Up to the minute monitoring of current and pending legislation for the use of chemicals in the leisure marine industry.
- Advice about best working practices related to the use of chemicals.
- Support and encourage the involvement of our members in pre-legislation consultation with regulatory bodies.

- To provide timely, relevant and useful advice about the restrictions of chemicals and suitable alternative technologies as and when applicable.
- Experience and knowledge of chemicals within the marine environment (paints, coatings, antifouling etc), would be particularly beneficial.
- Must have the ability to combine regulatory monitoring with detailed industrial chemical knowledge.

This consultant role will combine project-based assignments with some retained work and will not be a permanent role at ICOMIA. This opportunity may therefore be ideal for a consultant who is already supporting a range of clients in this operational field.
